MURDERED BY A NEGRO.

A SALOON RESPER BEATEN TO DEATH BY A DRUNKEN NEGRO WHO WAS TRYING TO BOB

A murder was last night perpetrated by a negro named Wellington Schuyler, which was attended by circumstances of a peculiar-ly aggravating character. The culprit in had entered the establishment of a quietly disposed man and by an attempt to rob him had exand drawn him into conflict. The murdered nan had only endeavored to save his property. It appears that in the early portion of the evening lington Scuyler, a burly negro, who bears no very enviable reputation in the Fifteenth precinct, became intextented and visited a number of saloous in that part of the city, in each of them displaying violence, which called for interference on the part of the persons in charge. At a late hour he entered the saloon of Nathan Corbin, at No. 134 Thompson street, and staggering up to the bar in a hostile way, eyed the son of the proprietor, who was standing there. A bottle of bitters on a shelf seemed to attract his attention, and without saying a word he moved behind the bar and grasped at it. The young man told him to be off, but he paid no heed to him, and when resistance was offered him he struck the youth with his fist, knocking him backward, while with his other hand he seized the coveted bottle. A struggle ensued, but the negro easily threw his antagonist off and came out wearing his prize above him.

AN ATTACK ON THE PATHER. The elder Corbin, who was in the saloon and had seen the assault on his son, rushed forward indignantly seen the assault on his son, rushed forward indignantly and was met by the demonstrative negro, who again and again struck him over the bead with the bottle. Mr. Corbin seized him, but was cast aside and Schuyler rushed into be street with the wounded man's blood spatiered over his clothes. He had reached the sidewalk and was hurrying away when Corbin struggled out after him and shouted "Police!" An officer out outstody. He was brought to the Sixteenth precinct and a charge of larceny precerved against him.

OORINK'S DRATH.

In the menntime, Corbin who had seen the arrest, and had acquanted the officer with the nature of the negro's offense, laint with leas of blood, called his son to assist him. The latter and another young man who was in the place burried out and helped him indoors. The wounded man said nothing to them, and when they brought him to a sofa, he slid himself down upon it in an inertilicies way that alarmed them. They hastened to administer stimulants to him, but it was too late. Nathan Corbin was dead.

In a cell in the Morcer street station house, meantime, the prisoner, who was stupefied with liquor, tell asleep. A reporter, in company with Captain Byrnes, visited Scuyler, who is a jet black negro, standing fully six feet high.

Captain Byrnes called him and asked if he had not been arrested before for an assault on his wite, who is a write woman.

"No," said he, "she was arrested and I came here to inquire about her and they took me in."

"Have you been engaged in any business of late," "Oh, yes" (he said this in an incoherent way), "I have been with Mr. Douglas. He can tell you the kind of a man I am."

"Did you know Mr. Corbin?"

"Why, yes."

"Do you know that you have killed him?"

The Captain evidently thought that this query would take his prisoner aback; but he received it quite coolly.

"Me kill him! I guees not. Why look at my bead. That man and his son welled me across here." And and was met by the demonstrative negro, who aguin coolly.

"Me kill him! I guess not. Why look at my head.
That man and his son welted me across here." And he showed a couple of cuts upon the back of his head.
Souyler was so intexicated that he did not seem in a condition to be further questioned, and he was sent back to his cell to recover from the delirium of drink and awake to the awful realization of the crime he has

A RELIGIO-MANIAC'S SUICIDE.

Mary Reilly, a maiden lady of about thirty years of sge, committed suicide yesterday afternoon by cutting her throat with a knife. She had for some time past ided with her sister at No. 118 Mott street. By her friends she was regarded as a religious monomaniac. In her younger days she developed a love of religious exercises and was a regular attendant at church services for years. Of late she began to manifest symptoms of insanity. She spoke irequently about the deprayity of the world, regarded herself as a recluse cut off from communication with t and as one whose term of life should be passed in explation of offences committed and never atoned for. For the last month or two she had been very despondent and complained that the Alaighty was displeased with her, and that His anger would only be appeased by her death. These expressions alarmed her friends, and, believing that she was insanc, they watched her. Her sister finding her unusually calm yesterday, absented herself for a few minutes.

During the sister's absence the insane woman shut herself up in her room and cut her throat. She was dead when the sister returned.

INSANITY INCREASING

The following insane persons were confined at serious nospital last light:—Affred I. Seniosson, aged twenty-live years, of No. 21 West Twenty-seventh street Winefred Glichrist, aged fifty years, of No. 551 second Avenue: Jane Muldoon, aged twenty-lour years, of No. 243 Chuton street; Michael Garry, aged twenty-nine years, of Rast 110th street, and John Roach, aged thirty-five years, of No. 155 Willis avenue. Over thirty persons insane have been brought to Bellevue during the present month.

OBITUARY.

MISS E. V. PROUDFOOT. Miss E. V. Proudfoot, who died in this city yesterday, was an actress of considerable merit and repute. She was born in Coburg, Canada, and began her theatrical career in New York in 1867. Her first appearance was at a benefit performance at Wallack's when she played the part of Mrs. Chillington in "The Morning Call," and rendered the sleep walking scene from "Macbeth." Soon afterward she apscene from "Macbeth." Soon afterward she appeared in "The Honeymoon" at the same sheatre, assuming the character of Juliana to the Duke Aranza of Mr. Charles Fisher. In these and contemporaneous performances Miss Proudfoot made a favorable impression, and when Booth's Theatre was first opened she became a member of the regular company. Subsequently she travelled with Jane Goombs, and played leading business for two seasons at Wood's Museum, Philadelphia. In 1874 and 1875 she travelled with Mr. R. L. Davenport, taking such parts as Lady Allworth in "A New Way to Pay Old Debts." Portia in "Ene Merchant of Venice" and the Queen in "Hamles?" When "Sardanapalus" was produced at Booth's Theatre she was engaged to play the part of the Queen, and afterward accompanied the provincial tour made with the piece. It was in one of these representations at Newport, R. L. that from a maplaced trap she received injuries which were followed by the six months' illness preceding her death. Her pomition upon the stage was an industrious one and her talents of that heavy order which require great opportunity for perfect development. Miss Proudfoot was thirty-two years of age at the time of her death. Her luneral will take place at one o'clock on Sunday from her late residence, No. 177 Lexington avenue.

DR. FELIX TRUST GOURAUD. Dr. Felix Trust Gourand, one of the first manufac turers of soap in this country, died in this city yes terday, at the advanced age of seventy-eight years. The deceased, in his business specialty, was almost as well known as Lubin. For thirty-seven years he had been assiduously devoted to his business.

LONDON, April 20—Cleared, bark Lowis Smith (Br), Wright, United States.

STJOHN, NB, April 20, 1677.

Between three and four o'clock this morning a fierce easterly gale set in here, followed by heavy rain. At daylight a report was made public that the ship Otago, hence for Liverpool, was ashore at Musquash, and some of her crow were drowned. Tugs at once started out and found the Otago lying at anchor off Mahogany Island. There was no truth in the story of the drowning, but her crow had experienced terrible suffering during the night. In order to save life and the vessel one must was cut away, and the experienced terrible suffering during the night. In order to save life and the vessel one mast was cut away, and the gale carried away the other two. Everything above the deck was swept away. The Otaga is loaded with deals, and belongs at Varmouth, NS. She has been towed back to this port for repairs.

The new hark Joseph Hickman, registering 1,000 tons, arrived from Dorchester while the gale was at its reatest fury. She was driven ashore on Beacon Bar, as was able the bark McLeou, awalting orders. The sarr Arabia, from Jagedh, with Coal, went ashore on the Sunzen Reef, near the Ballast Wharf.

Brig Maid of Llangollen, ready to sail for Port Rush, dragged her anchor and dritted into schooners on the western side of the harbor.

Barks Lizzie Burrill, for Liverpool; Magzie M, for Hare Island, and Urown Jewel, for Limerick, sailed hence with the Otago, and there have been all kinds of reports about the wharves concerning their safety, but nothing definite is known, and the general belief is that they rode out the gale in safety. The bay was known to be full of small craft from American ports. Schr Medora, from Boston, is the only arrival of these so far. Ship Henry, from Newcastle, &, and W A Campbell, from Liverpool, arrived during the gale all right.

Sand-point shore is strewn with deals, several scow loads having been carried away from vessels loading here.

The captain of the Otago, just landed, tells a strange story of the sufferings of his crew. It seems a great wonder how any lives were se ved. The storm lasted several hours, the rate being followed by a heavy rain. It has been the grounder state saids lines the Saxby storm. ton for Liverpool (and proceeded).
